MAJOR ADAMS CITES STATE POLICE IDEALS

Organization Serves Two-fold Purpose; Men Are All Well-Trained.

Major Lynn G. Adams, superintendent of the Pennsylvania state police, speaking at the weekly luncheon meeting of the Rotary club at the Eagle hotel, Monday evening, outlined the following ideals he has in mind for the organization which he heads:

Every applicant for a position on the force carefully chosen so that idlers and others with mercenary motives may be entirely eliminated.

Every trooper thoroughly trained for his position in detecting criminals and preventing crimes.

A system of pensions and retirements whereby every trooper will know that he and his family will not be left destitute should anything happen to him.

Raising the job of state trooper to that of a profession with a field of advancement so as to make it attractive to the kind of men desired.

Hopes for Increase
Major Adams said that although the state police has been short-handed for two years, he was informed before coming to Gettysburg that the state budget for the next biennium carries with it an appropriation for the force sufficient to bring it up to 421 men and officers, its full strength. For two years, the force has been operating with an average of 300 men and officers, he said.

Despite the lack of men, the force made 26,000 arrests in the last two years, securing convictions in 82 per cent of the cases. Property recovered during that period had a total value of a half million dollars, the superintendent added.

During the last twelve months, Major Adams continued, the state police investigated 178 murder cases, and troopers are now on the trail of a pair of "killers" which has led through the south from the bayous of Louisiana to the wharves at Galveston and back to the waterfront in New Orleans.

Serve Two-fold Purpose
After outlining the organization of the state police force, both in the field and in the office at Harrisburg, laying particular emphasis on the work of the bureau of investigation and identification, Major Adams told the two-fold purpose of the troopers. The major duty of the force, he said, was the detection and apprehension of criminals. "But these uniformed and armed men serve a second purpose," he continued. "They stand as a symbol to potential wrongdoers that certain arrest will follow if they transgress the laws of the commonwealth."

Because of the short-handed force during the last two years, it has often been necessary for troopers to be taken from sub-stations, such as the one here, and mobilized for duty where trouble is expected, the superintendent said, adding that he hoped that in the next two years, with a larger reserve force, such mobilization will not be necessary.

Major Adams particularly stressed the fact that the troopers are drilled from the time they enlist until they leave the force that it is wrong to commit a crime in order to uncover a crime, thereby discounting statements of "third degree" methods used in obtaining information or confessions from persons in custody.

Pastor Lauds Force
Quoting Judge Cavanaugh, of Chicago, Major Adams said laziness and selfishness are the dominating factors in crime. The same authority, he added, has said there are 118,000 known "killers" at large in the United States. In one year, 12,000 murders are committed in the United States and property (Continued on Second Page)

One hundred and fifty road supervisors were in attendance today at the twelfth annual convention of the Adams County Township Supervisors' association which was in session at the court house this morning and this afternoon. The invocation was given by the Rev. Dr. C. W. Baker, Gettysburg, after which the minutes of the last meeting were read by P. A. T. Bowers, secretary, and approved.

Butt, who talked on the subject, "The Present Law of Handling Deeds and Transfers," and H. A. Thompson, secretary of the state association of township supervisors.

Many Rumors Current on Poor Director Appointment

(Names of at least four active aspirants for the appointment to fill the vacancy on the board of directors of the poor, caused by the death of Hanson W. Taylor, Arentsville, were heard at the court house today. Those whose names were mentioned most frequently in connection with the appointment to be made by Judge D. P. McPherson were John D. VanDyke and William M. Deatrick, both of Butler township; Edward H. Benner, Mt. Joy township; and Emory G. Sterner, Gettysburg R. D. 1, all Republicans.

Two years ago, when the two Democratic members of the present board, C. E. Lawver and John A. Stambaugh, were elected, the two Republican candidates were Mr. VanDyke and Mr. Deatrick, the latter being third high in the election, with Mr. VanDyke trailing. In the Republican nomination of September, 1927, Deatrick was highest of three candidates, with VanDyke, second, and W. O. Anderson, third.

Mr. Benner, who is said to have the support of Irvin Black, Republican county chairman, served one term on the board of poor directors, his four-year term expiring December 1, 1925. In certain quarters of the Republican county organization, Mr. Benner's candidacy for the pending appointment is not being received with wholehearted support in view of his age and the fact that he

STATE URGES WHITE HOUSE SITE NEARBY

Introduction Of Resolution In Legislature Brings Speedy Action.

Copies of the "legislative journal" of the house and senate of the Pennsylvania legislature, just received locally, reveal the rapid manner in which the resolution proposing the location of the summer white house in the Blue Ridge Mountains of this state was carried, with customary red tape being severed, through the efforts of Senator Norman L. Bonbrake, of the Adams-Franklin district, in the senate and Representative Witherspoon, of Franklin county, in the house.

The resolution introduced and adopted immediately, instead of being sent to a committee, by unanimous vote, on January 15, in both houses, reads in full as follows:

The Resolution Adopted
Whereas, His Excellency, Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States, in a recent utterance urged the advisability of the establishment of a Summer White House to be used by the President and his family during the summer months, and

Whereas, The President further suggested that such summer residence should not be erected at too great a distance from Washington, and

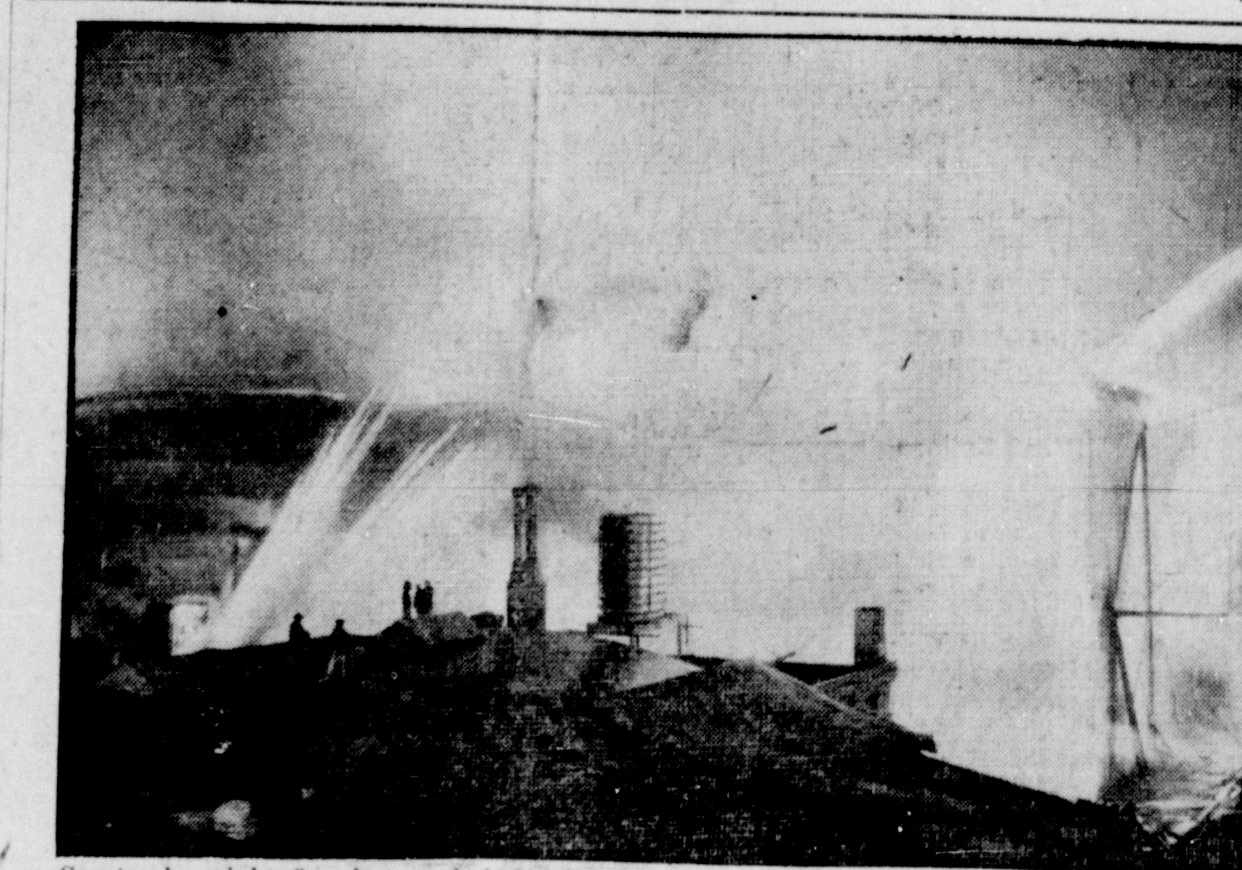

Whereas, The Blue Ridge Mountain section of this Commonwealth by reason of its elevation, climatic condition, the beauty and grandeur of its scenery and its accessibility to the City of Washington, would furnish an ideal, healthful and advantageous site for the location of such summer residence, therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania extend to the Federal Government: an invitation to consider the Blue Ridge Mountain section of Pennsylvania in any action taken to select a site for a summer White House; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be furnished by the Secretary of the Commonwealth to the Chief Clerk of the Senate and the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States.

Suggested by Burgner
The resolution was prepared and presented upon the suggestion of M. K. Burgner, resident clerk of the house, a member of the Chambersburg general committee, and the executive committee, of the six Pennsylvania and Maryland towns united in a movement to obtain location of the summer white house in this vicinity.

Officer Myrtle C. Wine, of the police department, was called to the scene and with Officer R. A. Wolford, who resides nearby and who was attracted by the sound of the crash, investigated and held Galbraith, the owner and the other occupant of the Gettysburg car for a hearing.

A second accident occurred at the same place while the police were investigating, a car driven by Corwin Horwold, Hanover, striking a machine owned and driven by Harry Fisher, who had parked his car nearby. Neither car was badly damaged.

Firemen Down McSherrystown

Last night the Gettysburg firemen sent the McSherrystown five down to a 30-29 defeat, after a thrilling and hard fought game in the Hotel Gettysburg annex.

Throughout the game the score was close and never more than five points ever separated the teams at any time. The work of Tuckey kept the firemen in the race in the first half. The fireman speed artist accounted for the first eight points of the locals, all on field goals. McSherrystown led 16-15 in the first half, mainly due to their fine foul shooting.

The visitors boosted their lead early in the second half and managed to set the pace until the last 10 minutes of play. Broom and Bender then looped goals that placed the locals in the lead. The smoke eaters then started to "freeze" the ball and were successful in their tactics. Joe Smith netted a goal for the conquerors of Olson's Swedes in the final minute of play and the game ended soon afterwards. Tuckey played a nice game for the locals while Devine and Groff looked good for McSherrystown.

YANKEE KILLED BY TRIBESMEN

Former American Minister To China Escapes When Attacked By Arabs.

Basra, Iraq, Jan. 22 (AP).—Charles R. Crane, former American Minister to China, escaped injury, but his companion, Henry Bilkerd, an American missionary, was killed when a band of Wahabi tribesmen riddled the automobile in which Crane and Bilkerd were riding near the Iraq-Arabian frontier Monday.

J. C. Crane, son of the former diplomat, and Charles Johnson, valet to the elder Crane, who were following in an open car, also were unhurt.

The two automobiles left Basra Monday morning en route for Kuwait (a principality along the Persian Gulf). The Wahabis, said to have numbered one hundred men, concealed themselves so well in the desert scrub that they were not observed by Bilkerd and the elder Crane, riding in a closed car.

The younger Crane reported, however, that he saw the attack and that when the two machines turned about Arab horsemen pursued them, but were soon outdistanced. It developed that Iraq shepherds had been warned of the approach of the raiders and had hurried with their flocks to Zubeir, the last Iraq town on the edge of the desert.

Harrisburg, Jan. 22 (AP).—A recurrence of the old rumor that James L. Stewart, secretary of highways, would resign was declared unfounded again today by Governor Fisher.

Armstrong's first screen appearance was in "The Main Event," William K. Howard's picture of the prize-ring, and his success in that and "The Leopard Lady," another Pathe-De Mille feature, caused Cecil B. De Mille to place him under contract. The casting of Robert Armstrong in "The Cop" adds another important link to the circle of players which support William Boyd, the star. Jacqueline Logan has the featured feminine role and Alan Hale is featured as a police captain in New York. "The Cop" is an original story by Elliott Clawson.

FANNIE BRICE MYMAN

By Arline de Haas

Copyright 1928 Warner Bros. Pictures Inc.
"MY MAN," starring Fannie Brice, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS
Fanny Brice is raising her brother, Phil, and her sister, Audrey, for whom she makes every sacrifice. But Audrey leaves home "to live her own life." In the costumer's shop where she works, Fanny's voice "discovered" by Lazarus, art director for Waldo, theatrical producer, who takes her to Waldo. During the audition Fanny learns of Audrey's interest in Waldo. Heartbroken, she fails in singing. Then Fanny helps a man, Tom, who is broke; falls in love with him, and, believing he loves her, precipitates an engagement. Audrey returns and Tom becomes infatuated. Fanny, trying on her wedding dress, sees Tom kissing Audrey. Tom and Audrey run away.

CHAPTER XII—Continued

Suddenly there came a loud knocking at the door. Fanny sat up, startled. That must be the people who were coming to her party that evening. She couldn't face them—she couldn't.

"Who's that?" Phil asked.

"It's—the—the people for—the party," Fanny sobbed. "Phil, dear, run and get me a drink." She'd have to let them in—have to. She'd have to make some explanation, some excuse.

Phil came running back with the water. Fanny managed to gulp a few swallows.

"You let them in, Phil, and I—"

Everybody tried to introduce everybody else.

"I try to—to get dressed," she pined, struggling to her feet. "Sure, sis," Phil bustled off to the door and Fanny turned to wards her room, anxious only to run away and hide before anyone saw her.

CHAPTER XIII

Phil raced to the door and threw it open. Leaping, talking people, their arms full of packages, called a welcome and streamed through the corridor. Young men and girls, some with banjos, saxophones and ukuleles, giggling, nudging each other, looking around to take account of their surroundings. Oh, it was to be an hilarious, merry evening.

Bicker went jumping up and down, trying to help his small master usher in the guests. And Phil was not at all at a loss. He had been put in charge of the proceedings, and he was very proudly playing the host. He showed them where to put their wraps, and where they could pile the presents. "Where's Fanny?" they were asking. And "Where's she gone?" as they scattered about the living room.

"She'll be out in just a little bit," Phil answered everybody importantly. "Let's get some of this stuff opened for her," some one suggested, starting to untie the bundles.

"Oh, here, let her open that one herself," another called, seizing a package and thrusting it to one side. "That's a surprise."

Wild shouts of laughter greeted some of the display. A miniature perambulator, some children's toys and a rolling pin were unsearched in turn, to the great amusement of the group. Cakes of Oba and Aha, and little gingers resembled when silk underwear was brought to view. And then there was some table linen, embroidered, and breakfast sets—everything that anyone could think of.

More and more knocks came at the door, and Phil was kept hurrying back and forth, letting in new arrivals. General introductions were in order. All the girls from Thomas knew each other, but each had brought along a friend. And at that the little living room was filled to overflowing. Even Thomas himself appeared, and with him, none other than Lazarus, who had come to Fanny if he might come to celebration, because she, her brother and sister had been in awe of

ARM CHAIR JOURNEYS TO OTHER LANDS

By Louis P. Lechner
Berlin (AP).—Signs and symbols displayed in front of German shops are quite as baffling to the stranger as was the Indian before an American cigar star or the red, white and blue pillar before a barber shop. Butchers, barbers and dairymen are among those in Germany who have clung to century-old trademarks.

The spectacle of a kitchen chair draped with a spotless white apron hanging out in front of a butcher shop causes no end of amusement in fall and winter. It means that fresh, warm sausage is for sale inside.

The aproned chair had its origin more than two centuries ago on the farms which surrounded the numerous villages. Farmers, their wives and hired hands, having finished slaughtering pigs and cooking up meat and blood for sausage, washed out their aprons and hung them over chairs to dry in the sun. City folk happening by soon learned to realize that the aproned chair was a never failing sign of fresh sausage.

When a shop displays what looks like a large golden apple, but is in reality a gilded ball, it means that butter is sold there. The gilded ball idea was obtained from Dutch dairy farmers who at the invitation of King Frederick William I settled in the valley of the Havel river near Potsdam. The immigrants from the Netherlands brought their butter to market in balls.

A barber shop can be espied half a block away by the brass soap plate which dangles from a rod extending over the sidewalk. This sign dates back before the invention of the shaving mug. Tonsorial artists of old worked up a lather in a shallow platter resembling a soap plate. Some of these fine old china plates are still in use today. They furnished the inspiration for the gilded platter.

Barbers catering to American trade hang out a small red and white striped pole in addition to the "soap plate." Suggestions of changing the emblem because of the number of feminine visitors now frequenting barber shops have been turned down by overwhelming majorities in master barbers' meetings.

Berlin's official sign is a black bear sitting erect on his haunches, his red tongue curled out of his mouth. It is a sign which appears on all tourist literature distributed by the municipal tourist bureau. The bear has figured in the city's annals since its founding about 1134, chiefly because of its prevalence in the surrounding forests.

The bear in walking pose was chosen for the official municipal seal when various towns about 1709 united to form what is now the heart of Berlin.

Belgrade (AP).—It is not given to the average Serbian to select his life partner. A custom requires that the "matchmaker" shall find the bride for an eligible young man.

Down country, it is the custom for boys and girls to marry very young. In Nish and the neighboring district, if a lad reaches the age of 18 and is still unmarried, he is considered too old to make a good match.

The "matchmaker" usually is an old woman and is known as a "Provdajia." He, or she, is usually a friend of the family.

Of course, the "Provdajia" is familiar in all points concerning the character, capacity, talents, and especially the state of exchequer of the one whose cause is to be pleaded.

A meeting is arranged in order to let the young people see each other and the betrothal soon follows.

The "Provdajia" in return for her pains receives a handwoven shirt and a pair of knitted stockings, and a money gift which varies according to the social position of the bridegroom's family. She has also the satisfaction of ranking among the few "intimates" of the family.

In the rural districts, when a lad sets out to pledge himself to his girl, he takes all kinds of presents with him, which may be anything from an umbrella to a cake of soap. When the prospective bridegroom is wealthy, he travels in oxcarts, laden with presents in Biblical fashion, to the home of his sweetheart. He is accompanied by all his friends and relations.

The party is heralded by a band of gypsy fiddlers and brought up in the rear by a roast lamb or pig, carried on the spit, in addition to flagons of wine and brandy.

A priest officiates at the betrothal, the rite being called "Isplit" (examination), when the wedding rings are exchanged. The future bride wears the fiancé's ring and vice versa, until the day of the marriage service, when the priest then places the rings on the fingers of the rightful owners.

The engagement is as binding as the actual wedding. Branches of promise of marriage are unknown in Yugoslavia. Woe to the bridegrooms who would dare to break an engagement. The menfolk of the bride in that case would exact blood feud.

of the old bazaar, a meandering world of colorful booths and tiny shops that squat along narrow, cobble-stone alleys covered by the same vast cob-webby roof.

Hurried tourists, however, bless the most recent of the new improvements: the "fixed price district," where the prefecture has gathered examples of the bazaar's chief wares—hammered brass, rugs, silks, embroideries, Kutaiha pottery, amber, coral and saddle-wood prayer-beads, Attar of Roses and incense, and wrought silver—dominated by a huge sign, "No bargaining here!"

Natives hold this district in as much horror as the devil does holy water, for to them the whole joy of shopping is the intricate rigmarole of bargaining. There is a fixed etiquette for the game of unfixed prices and woe to the merchant or purchaser who slips up on any of the rules of the game.

The cardinal principle is for the customer to evince profound contempt for the article he is determined to buy and for the merchant to demonstrate abysmal despair at the idea of parting with the object which he is determined to sell. Hours of impassioned dialogue can thus be wound about even so simple a bit of merchandise as a night-cap or a donkey's blue-beaded bridle while the customer punctuates his invectives with innumerable cigarettes and cups of coffee offered by the perspiring, gesticulating salesman.

At a certain point in the game, the purchaser—without purchasing—must stalk out of the booth, which is the cue for the merchant to drag him back for another coffee and another scene. Finally the bargain is clinched at about one-third of the price originally demanded. Glowing, the customer walks off with his package of incense, his hubble-bubble pipe, or his nightcap, while the merchant, mopping crocodile tears, wails, "For your sweet sake, I have ruined myself. By the eyes of my two children, by the one lone tooth of my grandmother, I swear you have cheated me."

MAYTAGS NEAR THE SOUTH POLE

The million-dollar Byrd South Pole expedition has reached its base in the Bay of Whales, Antarctica. Hence the Maytags chosen for the expedition are the farthest south that washing machines or any other home conveniences were ever carried before. They are 2400 miles south of the nearest human dwelling.

Equipped with powerful radio broadcasting equipment, the expedition keeps in daily touch with the rest of the world, but what the rest of the world is doing will get to be as interesting to the expedition members as the expedition's experiences will be to the rest of the world.

THE SWEETLAND

"We know our Luckies That's how we stay slender"

EVERY woman who fears overweight finds keen interest in new-day and common-sense ways to keep a slender, fashionable figure. Overweight must be avoided. "Better to light a Lucky whenever you crave fattening sweets."

Toasting does it. Toasting develops and improves the flavor of the world's finest tobaccos. Lucky Strike satisfies the longing for things that make you fat, without interfering with a normal appetite for healthful foods. That's why Luckies are good to smoke. Toasting makes Lucky Strike the healthy cigarette for you to smoke.

Many men who carefully watch their health discovered this years ago. They know that Luckies steady their nerves and do not slow up their physical vigor—prominent athletes have gone on record that this is so. They know that 20,679 physicians have stated that Luckies are less irritating to the throat than other cigarettes.

A reasonable proportion of sugar in the diet is recommended, but the authorities are overwhelming that too many fattening sweets are harmful and that too many such are eaten by the American people. So, for moderation's sake we say:—

"REACH FOR A LUCKY INSTEAD OF A SWEET."

ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO

Nashville, Tenn., Dec. 26.
Died.—The death of Mrs. Jackson, consort of General Andrew Jackson, came upon our community like an electric shock. Arrangement had been made by the citizens of Nashville for a public dinner and a ball on Tuesday in honor of the general, and he was expected to town in the morning to receive the congratulations of his friends and to partake with them a parting glass, preparatory to his departure for the seat of national government. On Thursday preceding Mrs. Jackson was attacked with severe pain in the arm, shoulder and side and violent palpitation of the heart. Medical assistance however soon afforded her belief and no serious result was apprehended. On Monday she sent for the physician, who was in the next room, and before he could reach her she fell from her chair and expired in less than two minutes. The immediate cause of this awful event is supposed to have been a sudden spasmodic affection of the heart.
The funeral took place on Wednesday and was attended by an immense crowd from Nashville and the surrounding country.
Most sincerely do we sympathize with our distinguished fellow citizen in this severe and trying affliction. At the moment of his high elevation, he is suddenly depressed and cast down. His hopes are disappointed, his plans deranged. This is indeed a great and sudden reverse, and affords a striking lesson of the uncertainty of human happiness, a forcible illustration of the mixture of alloy with the richest and purest of human enjoyment.

THE DANGER OF PRAISE

One time she made a devil's food
When we were early wed.
"My darling, dear, this cake is good."

While eating it I said,
"I'll vow it is the finest cake
Of all the tasty things you make."

I fancied then man should bestow
A little word of praise,
When pleasure has been his to know

'Tis but a debt he pays.
I felt he should by word or look
Give recognition to the cook.

But woman has a curious way,
As I was soon to find,
She fed me devil's food each day
And naught of other kind.

For weeks and weeks no interlude
Relieved the flow of devil's food.
I longed to bite a chocolate cake,
Or eat a current bun,
I wished in secret she would make A tart Napoleon,
Bread pudding, or I cared not what.

But devil's food was all I got.
At last in desperation I Let loose like one insane.
I think the neighbors heard me
cry:

"What! Devil's food again!"
She said, as though I'd struck a blow,
"My dear, I thought you liked it so!"

And now whatever food she serves
Not by a word or look
Is praise of mine, which she deserves,
Bestowed upon the cook.
I once thought devil's food sublime
Till forced to eat it all the time.

Now I suppose you are wondering what became of Silver Heels,
the little donkey, who was thrown into the river when the hobgoblin
swordfish sank the fairy ferry boat.
Well, I'll tell you right away what the clever donkey did. He kicked out his heels and, would you believe it, struck the long, sharp bony nose of that wicked hobgoblin swordfish with such force that it cracked wide open! After that the swordfish was helpless and so without further fear or danger, the little donkey made for the shore,
where he found Little Jack Rabbit and the Fairy Queen anxiously waiting for him.

"Now, make haste to rescue dear
Uncle Lucky from the spell of the Wicked Water Witch," cried the Queen of the Fairies. "I hope you have not lost the Magic Purple Weed," she added.

"No, I have it safe in my pocket," replied the little bunny, and hopping on the donkey's back, he urged him away at a gallop. By and by, after a while and a fairy mile, which I understand is a little longer than our every day mile, the little donkey came to a halt before a small hut in the forest.

"Let us enquire whether the Wicked Water Witch is about?"
whispered donkey Silver Heels.
Tip tap, tip tap! rapped the bunny boy on the door, which was at once opened by a small boy, whose ears, strange to say, were like those of a rabbit.

"Hello!" cried the rabbit eared boy.
"Let me ask you a question,"
cried Little Jack Rabbit. "Please bend over. Is the Wicked Water Witch about?" he then whispered
in the boy's long, furry ear.

"This is her house. She lives here," answered the rabbit eared child, with a shiver. Gracious me!
Wasn't that too dreadful for anything? Just think, here was our little bunny on her doorstep. Oh, I hope this wicked witch doesn't suddenly come around the corner,
although, come to think of it,
there aren't any corners in a forest.
But she might jump out from everyday little pink ears such as any child wears. "Come, jump on my donkey's back. I'll take you away," cried the brave little rabbit.

"Hurry, hurry," brayed the anxious donkey. "Cling fast to my mane and squeeze tight with your knees for I'm going as swift as a 60 mile breeze," went on this brave little donkey, and "in poetry, too.
Just think of that. Too bad that
"Remmy," my faithful typewriter,
neglected to print this lovely poem
in verse form!

But, oh dear me! The three of them had gone but a short distance
when a shrill scream echoed through the wood.
"Oh, oh, oh!" shivered the little boy. "Tis the witch. I know her voice!" And in the next story you shall hear what happened after that.

TRAGEDY LEAVES MARK ON BABE

Slim Pickens sure did fool his mule last Sunday. The mule has been in the habit of knowing as well as Slim did where they were going every Sunday afternoon, and of course the mule headed toward the home of the Calf Ribs Widow,
when in fact Slim was going to call on another young lady. The mule had not heard of the racket between Slim and the Widow.

Dock Hocks says a man in business must never lose his temper—especially if he is a strong blacksmith, as he is liable to hurt somebody. And the Rye Straw storekeeper, who has been in business so long he has about dried up and gone to seed, says he cannot afford to make anybody mad, for fear of somebody hurting him.

The Report of the Superintendent of Common Schools is as usual an interesting document, showing the gradual improvements in this system. The superintendent estimates the number of schools open during the year at over 10,000, the average time they were open was five months. The average pay of the teachers has increased, that of males being $19.25 per month, and that of females $12.64. The whole number of pupils in attendance was about 480,000. This does not include Philadelphia. The amount of school tax levied in this state exclusive of Philadelphia city and county was $1,021,337.34.

Chicago Conducts Clean-up Of Thugs

Chicago, Jan. 22 (AP).—The city's lock-up bulged and the three police departments worked overtime Monday as they questioned, photographed and finger printed 3,400 prisoners taken in Chicago's greatest underworld round-up.

Opened Saturday night, the dragnet was folded and put away for the time being only because raiding squads reported they could find no more suspects or haunts that needed raiding.

Every police station in the city
was jammed with suspects brought in wagon loads until the early hours of Monday. It was estimated three to four days would be needed to sift the crowd and make the necessary records.

Apparently the raids are having their effect, only one robbery being reported Sunday night and two men involved were arrested a short time after.

TODAY'S TALK

By GEORGE MATTHEWS ADAMS

THE LIBRARY OF THE MIND
FOR fully half my life I have loved and collected books. Every year or so now finds a new bookcase filled with new tomes.
This year I had to increase the number to three new cases! It was a rather expensive book year.

My new friends have made my life richer and warmer. Already, however, I need another case to take care of the increasing hoard of oncoming volumes. How I happily—and I like to think, unselfishly, envy the one with all the money needed to spend for books and who has the necessary room for them.

There is a place, however, where no expensive bookcases and no extended room is called for, and where a limitless number of volumes may be placed, and that is the Library of the Mind!

Every time you walk out into the light of the day, every time you talk with another human being, every time you use your eyes or your ability to think, you really write a volume, big or little,
for this Library of your Mind.

We cannot tell by looking at a person just how great a library he has, any more than we can judge of one's wealth or true character by a mere glance at the face.

William James, in his little book entitled "Human Immortality," says that "each new mind brings its own edition of the universe of space along with it, its own room to inhabit; and these spaces never crowd each other."

Sometimes this material library of ours entails a burden, because of its increasing expense or the space it takes, but this library of the mind need have nothing of this sort. And what a pleasure to visit the mind libraries of every one with whom we come in contact! We get a little of the thrill that we do upon examining the material library of a friend when being entertained in his home.

Remember that you can be a real author, publisher, and collector of priceless "first editions," merely by refusing to let anything get by you that is worth recording in your mind, or that is worth gloriously picturing by the artist who sits in the seat of your imagination!

HEALTH TALK

"The alluring advertisements that point to 'painless tooth extraction' and 'beautiful new teeth at low cost' may or may not have some bearing upon the unfortunate indifference that so many people display toward mouth health," said Dr. Theodore B. Appel, secretary of health, today.

"However, the fact remains that with the splendid facilities now available for the scientific treatment of teeth deflections, the vast majority of people disregard the dentist's existence until something hurts.

"Nature, for the most part, gives all of us a square deal, but regarding some diseases it is loath to inform the individual that something is wrong until the condition is so advanced that irreparable damage has resulted. Therefore, unless the practiced eye of the trained investigator is permitted to survey the situation before the person is himself conscious of difficulty, unfortunate consequences are likely to result.

"This fundamental and proven rule of preventive medicine not only applies to cancer, diabetes, tuberculosis and heart disease, but to diseased teeth.

"To give an outstanding example, rheumatism frequently results from defective teeth and rheumatism is one of the common causes of heart disease. It is a pity that many suffering from these and other conditions could have saved themselves by a timely visit to a reputable dentist.

"The teeth are great friends of the body but if neglected can turn into mortal enemies. The semi-annual check by the dentist is the only safe and reasonable practice. Put this duty, therefore, on a regular schedule.

"Do not neglect your teeth, because in that event, they may decidedly neglect you."

AS AMERICANS KNOW MARSHAL FOCH, STRICKEN BY HEART ATTACK

Glimpses into the life of Ferdinand Foch, marshal of France and commander-in-chief of the Allied armies during the closing days of the World war, stricken by a heart attack at his home in Paris, France. 1. Foch in America, where great crowds hailed him as he rode in a car with General John J. Pershing, American commander-in-chief. 2. Foch the sportsman. A recent snapshot of the veteran soldier and his wife at the Longchamps race track in France. 3. The war lord of all the allies. Foch shown astride his steed while commanding troops during the war with the Germans. 4. As an orator, the white-haired, pleasant old war hero was greatly in demand. Here he is speaking at the recent dedication of the Nice, France, war memorial. 5. In retirement. Resting from his harrowing task of staving off defeat and destruction of his country during the war, Foch was ending his days in quiet and peace when illness overtook him.
